PROHIBITION AGENTS LEARNING THEIR TRADE

Webster Spates, at the blackboard, is instructing prohibition agents about how the law functions at the Prohibition School in Washington. The classes are held for the benefit of those who feel that they have a vocation to be agents.

A Hard-Working Federal Department

The United States District Attorney's Department for New Jersey has done well in its handling of a tremendous task during the fiscal year closing June 30. Credit is due former United States District Attorney Walter G. Winne and his successor, District Attorney James W. McCarthy, and their assistants. July 17, 1928

Enforcement of prohibition and the normal increase in other branches of the department's work has brought to the United States District Attorney's office an overwhelming volume of business. It has been handled as expeditiously as possible and with a degree of efficiency which is indicated by the fact that out of 628 prohibition cases tried acquittals were returned in only eighteen instances.

Mr. McCarthy expresses the belief that the business transacted by his office during the last fiscal year was greater than that of any private or public office in the State of New Jersey and it is not likely, in view of the record of accomplishment set forth in the annual report to Attorney General Sargent, that this opinion will be disputed.

It is certain that the office of the Attorney General of New Jersey, with its fancy-priced staff of fourteen or fifteen men, is hardly in a position to offer a record of public service comparable with that of the United States District Attorney's office with a staff half as large and paid on a far more moderate scale.
